Father Darkleaf Observes .....

Observers who saw the football game between Appomattox and Clarksville here last Friday, expressed the opinion that Appomattox was unbeatable, especially in the second half. The boys played with an abandon and fury never before seen in Appomattox. As Charlie McCarthy would say, "they mowed 'em down." Well, one of the reasons, perhaps THE reason, was that between halves coach Hill told his boys that this was his last game, he was leaving December 1st to take a job in Tennessee, and "boys, win this last one for me?" The team came back on the field with tear-filled eyes, and nothing could stop them. Final score: Appomattox 24, Clarksville 6!

CALLING PARIS!

Behind scenes in the U. S. state department is a pulsing communication machine which keeps official Washington informed instantaneously of diplomatic maneuvers throughout the world. Before Secretary of State Cordell Hull gives his news to Washington correspondents (above), hundred hands have kept flowing the constant stream of information from American diplomats abroad. Here is made the news that determines U. S. foreign policy, an all-important function that Europe is at war.

—This story is about the time when all the nations overseas were fighting for supremecy, both on ground, seas and in the air. This is a story of a German aviator, Hiroon Von Richofen, who was called the ace of Germany. He had shot down eighty British aeroplanes and hundreds of his enemies. He would keep the insignia of each plane he shot down in a special room at his home. When finally he was shot down by an American, his mother kept his insignia.

Life of Henry M. Stanley, by Arthur Montefiore, Publishers, A. S. Barnes Company. 187 pages.
Reviewed by R.B. Hudgins, Jr.

—John Rolbert was born in Wales. He had a brilliant mind and showed a preference for arithmetic and geography. He had a desire to be an adventurer so went to Liverpool, from where he sailed to New Orleans. There he found work in an office of a merchant named Stanley. Mr. Stanley was very much pleased with him and having no children, adopted him. He assumes the name and then of Henry Morton Stanley. Later he was commissioned by the New York Herald, which sent him to Abyssinia. He gave such favorable accounts of his Abyssinian expedition th eNew York Herald sent him on the daring expedition to find the reported lost missionary and explorer, Livingstone, if alive. Stanley started at once on his expedition. After traveling through jungles over and between mountains, encountering enemies and having not less than twenty-three attacks of fever in east Africa, he and his band finally reached Ujiji and to his great delight found Dr. Livingstone on November 10, 1871. Stanley went back to England and reported this news.

After Dr. Livingstone's death, the New York Herald and an English paper sent Stanley back to follow Livingstone's course. Stanley introduced Christianity in a part of Africa which Livingstone had not traveled.

After many trials Stanley performed the task allotted him. Missions were set up in Africa by several denominations. In 1878 Stanley started on his fourth expedition to Africa, which was philanthropic, scientific and commercial. On the fifth expedition Stanley built stations, roads and started farming. Among the pioneers of dark lands, his name will take a foremost place.

TULAREMIA- Rabbit Disease

"Last year in Virginia 144 cases of Tularemia, sometimes called rabbit disease, were reported to the State Department of Health. Deaths totaled 12. A decade ago the reported cases aggregated 321, with 2 fatalities. As, presumedly, there were about as many small-game hunters in the Virginia woods ten years ago as there were during the 1938 hunting season, it is fair to assume that, in line with other states, Virginia's rabbit population is more infected with tularemia than formerly, even making allowances for more accurate diagnosis in recent years. This fact is of significance to rabbit hunters and to all those handling rabbit carcasses, states Dr. J.C. Riggin, Commissioner of Health.

"Invariably, tularemia cases are reported more frequently during the hunting season than at any other time. While the disease is caused by a germ found in various kinds of infected rodents, and can be acquired, among other ways, through bites of ticks, deer flies, stable flies, and squirrels, it is most frequently transmitted by man in this section of the United States by infected wild rabbits, hence the name 'rabbit disease.'

"The common method of transmission is through wounds or small abrasions, sometimes minute, on the hands of those cleaning or otherwise handling rabbit carcasses; in this manner the germs reach the human blood stream, symptoms developing in from one to ten days. The victim suddenly complains of headache, has body pains, chills, fever, and vomits. The fever which may run high usually last two or three weeks. Convalescence is slow. Death occurs in approximately 5 per cent of the cases.

"The above facts indicate that hunters should not kill slow moving rabbits. Healthy wild rabbits do not carry. Also, for those who dress rabbits, it is advisable to use rubber gloves. This suggestion applies equally to hunters and housewives. It is the one safe defense against acquiring tularemia from this source.

"There is no desire to imply that most wild rabbits harbor the eularemia germ. Compared to the total rabbit population, the infected rabbit decidedly is in the minority. On the other hand, the number of infected animals is sufficiently large in the aggregate not so take any undue chances.

"Incidentally, it may be added that thoroughly cooked rabbit meat, even though the animal had been infected with tularemia, is harmless and perfectly safe food. Consequently, those who enjoy this game need have no qualms about consuming it."

Vocational Agriculture Pays Good Income to Va. Boys

Richmond, Nov. 22.- Virginia farm boys earned $1,102,854 from vocational agriculture programs last year, this production coming from 33,307 acres of crops, 22,586 head of livestock and 500,208 fowls, according to Dr. Sidney B. Hall, state superintendent of public instruction.

There are 9,254 farm boys enrolled in courses offered at 306 rural high schools, and in addition, there are 2,476 young men attendinr 182 classes apart from the regular day schools, Dr. Hall said. Discussing the development of this statewide effort, Dr. Hall stated:

"The student carries out his farming program as an individual on his home farm, but many of the problems confronting him can be more effectively solved through cooperative effort. The F. F. A., an organization for white boys, and the N. F. A., an organization for Negro boys, offer an opportunity for the farm boy to learn to work with others to his own enjoyment and profit."

As for adult farmers, some 5,497 enrolled in classes last year and applied improved farm methods to 17,182 farm operations.

TRUCK CROP OUTLOOK FINE

Increased acreage planted to commercial truck crops for fresh market shipment, following the trend of the last two decades, is expected to result in slightly larger supplies than the record production of 1939, truck specialists of the Virginia Agricultural Extension Division report.

Despite larger supplies, improvement in demand conditions in 1940 over 1939 probably will result in slightly higher prices for these crops as a group and a larger cash income to producers, says the report. Although acreage planted to fall truck crops is usually small relative to the total for the country as a whole, it is noteworthy that fall plantings this season are increased 6 per cent over 1939.

Appomattox merchants will gladly handle your country produce.
